

To Whom it May Concern:

Dhruv Aggarwal was a development intern for two months over the summer of 2018 at Valiance Partners. His work spanned several technologies and coding languages, and his solid fundamentals in programming helped him become proficient quickly. His development language was C# which he used to complete several projects for the company. The software he created had requirements that included: effective use of SQL, handling XML files including load, save, parse and edit operations, web API calls within regulated environments and creating a validation software package that is currently being moved into our production code base. The validation software is of medium scope and high complexity, as it has rules checking methods that span SQL, mapping of data from sources to targets and the possibility of all this across more than 30 data source types. Dhruv also contributed to documenting the functionality he developed in our knowledge base and formal product documentation. He was a welcome contributor at our weekly development team meetings, where he demonstrated his work, along with showing how the software met business needs.

The quality of his software was very high, with near zero issues, and was written in a way that others could quickly understand.

Dhruv was punctual, an effective communicator and well-liked by those with whom he worked. He worked well starting either with a concept or a detailed set of requirements. It was particularly nice to observe him work from a concept phase and see where his creativity took him. In several cases he not only impressed us on his main deliverable but also had inspired derivative functionality that was valuable to the company. Dhruv was well organized; if you needed something from him, he knew where it was and delivered promptly. Last, is the need to mention his positive personality and energy. He was up-beat all the time with a personable smile and great attitude towards his work and coworkers.

The whole development team and I are impressed with his work and give our highest recommendation for him.

Please feel free to contact me directly if you need additional information or want to discuss Dhruv's skills in depth.

Sincerely,

Doug Isaacson
Senior Software Developer,
Valiance Partners
908-696-9600